Troy Crisswell Workshop

Phases of Painting:

The Process of Starting a Painting

A workshop in conjunction with the
Parnell Memorial Library Gallery Exhibit
Winter Showing - Troy and Becky Bolton Crisswell
December 3, 2009 - March 13, 2010

Workshop Overview

This is a workshop to help you understand process and to gain insights that you can apply to your own paintings. You will not need advanced drawing skills. The workshop will emphasize the process of starting a painting. Vivid and instructive examples will be demonstrated with oils and watercolors as Crisswell shares ideas, approaches, thoughts and techniques:

- Laying down the background
- Washes
- Creating atmosphere
- Transferring ideas to painting

There will be a combination of gallery discussion (questions & answers) and an up-close viewing of how Crisswell works. The workshop participants* are welcome to bring watercolor supplies and follow along in some of the demonstrations as Crisswell shows and discusses what he is thinking, seeing and doing as he begins a painting.

*Upper level high school students, college students, faculty and interested adults may register. The workshop will be limited to twenty participants.

Workshop Schedule:

9:15 - 9:30 Arrival (coffee & donuts)
9:30 - 10:00 Gallery Q's & A's
10:00 - 12:00 Painting demonstrations
12:00 - 12:45 Lunch break *
12:45 - 1:00 Gallery Q's & A's
1:00 - 3:00 Painting demonstrations

*You may bring your own lunch or there are several places to eat within a few blocks of the library.

Troy Crisswell has been painting full time since the early 90's. He began mostly in watercolors and about ten years ago decided to start painting in oils.

He has self-published his first book, Thoughts on Painting (Spring 2009). It includes early works through the present, instructional comments on processes and materials and some humorous accounts along the way.

To view recent paintings, to order a book or see his upcoming art shows, visit Crisswell's website:
